One on One Services Return to Library

The Fort Saskatchewan Public Library is thrilled to offer some exciting one on one services to the community this fall. All services are free of charge.

Starting September 9, in partnership with the Edmonton Immigrant Service Association, the Library has a settlement services practitioner Riza Tuiza who connects newcomers to available services and resources in the community.   Please call 780-991-8223 or email RTuiza@eisa-edmonton.org to book a free consultation session at the Library.

Beginning September 7, in partnership with Families First Society, the Library has a steadfast connector Aylisa Elridge who helps connect families with the many services in the community to assist them in areas of mental health, finance and housing. This service is available every Tuesday.

Brush up on your basic computer skills with Moira Buck. Get help with using your laptop, smartphone, online banking or even sending an email or resume. Residents can book a one hour Tech Help session now by calling 780-998-4275.

New for the Library starting in October is a genealogy program called Roots to Research. Did you know Ancestry Library Edition is a free e-resource included with your free library card? Dig into the past with an individual one hour session with Robina Sobey. Call 780-998-4275 or email fsasklib@fspl.ca .

"The pandemic has been a challenge putting a great deal of stress on individuals and families. We want to help connect them with some services in the community that will provide assistance and relief," comments Library Director Michele Fedyk.

Fort Saskatchewan Public Library, located on 10011- 102 Street, provides and promotes resources, services and programs to meet community needs for leisure, study and information in an environment that is welcoming and supportive.
